JOURNAL ARTICLE DISCUSSION

Members discussed “U.S. Hospital Employment of Foreign-Educated Nurses and Patient Experience: A Cross-Sectional Study,” which was published in the October 2017 issue of Journal of Nursing Regulation.

Delahoyde said that is her experience, foreign-educated nurses seem to be excited to work in the U.S. She wondered if the article’s finding of lower patient satisfaction in hospitals that employ more foreign-educated nurses might be due to language issues.

Reznicek noted that foreign-educated nurses often receive more extensive midwifery training than U.S. nurses. Reznicek said that staff at the hospital in North Platte, Nebraska, which uses a lot of foreign-educated nurses, have expressed appreciation for these nurses’ labor and delivery nursing skills.

Stones pointed out that while the study showed a correlation between the number of foreign-educated nurses at a hospital and patient satisfaction, it does not show definitive cause-and-effect relationships. Stones wondered if employers’ orientation process for foreign-educated nurses might be inadequate.

Motl said that orienting international nurses using a facility’s general orientation is usually not sufficient. She suggested the use of a cultural liaison who can help explain differences between the way things are done in the U.S. and the nurse’s home country. Motl also noted that nurses in every country use their own slang and acronyms. If foreign-educated nurses do not receive training in the nursing jargon used in the U.S, they are being set up for failure.

Smutny reported that she recently talked with a nurse from the Philippines who described the steps he had to take in order to work in the U.S. Smutny noted that it was an extensive process.

Anderson said that when foreign-educated nurses have been investigated for discipline, it is usually unclear whether cultural differences or language barriers exacerbated the problems that led to the investigation. Anderson also noted that in some parts of the world, nurses do tasks that in the U.S. are normally done by physicians and pharmacists.

Oertwich reported that a couple of articles about foreign-educated nurses have been printed in Nursing News. The International Centre on Nurse Migration has also completed studies on the issue. Oertwich noted that nursing is increasingly becoming international profession.
2022 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Oertwich reported that the Center for Nursing and the Nebraska Nursing Association testified at the Legislature on behalf of LB1044, LB1055, and LB1091. LB1044 would provide $2 million in American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) funds to hospitals for the purpose of developing new care models. LB1055 would provide $50 million in ARPA funds for premium pay to frontline nurses. LB1091 would appropriate ARPA funds to provide scholarships to build the nursing workforce. Oertwich noted that there was a testifier who opposed LB1091 on the basis that there was no seats available at nursing programs. Oertwich said that Center for Nursing and DHHS staff scrambled to get the Health and Services Committee data showing that seats were available at many programs. Another bill, LB1269, would allocate ARPA funds for the repayment of student loans for some health care professionals.

COVID-19 LICENSING WAIVERS

Oertwich reported that the Executive Order that allows for the waiver of certain licensing requirements is due to expire on March 31, 2022. Waiver currently allowed under this Executive Order include the issuance of provisional licenses to nurses who have not yet passed NCLEX and the reinstatement of RN and LPN licenses to persons who do not meet the continuing competency requirement. Oertwich noted that provisional licenses were needed at the start of the COVID-19 pandemic because NCLEX testing locations had closed down. Even though testing sites are now fully operational, Oertwich reported that some nursing students seems to have the impression that they are required to obtain provisional licenses.

HRSA GRANT

Oertwich reported that UNMC did publicize their receipt of a HRSA grant to develop programs aimed at promoting resiliency among nurses. Oertwich expressed hopes that future publicity will acknowledge the role played by the Center for Nurse and other partners in the grant. Oertwich said the UNMC School of Public Health is working on mental first aid and nursing wellness. Oertwich noted that many nurses seem to prefer the term “wellness” rather than “resiliency.” Oertwich also reported that they will try to use the ECHO platform to pilot critical incident debriefing sessions for nurses who experience traumatic events at work.

NCSBN MIDYEAR MEETING

Oertwich and Motl will attend the NCSBN Midyear Meeting in person. Stones will attend virtually. Motl said that one issue she would like to bring up at the President’s Meeting is how other states view telenursing across state lines, and whether they consider nursing care to occur where the patient is, where the nurse is, or where the organization is located. Anderson noted that the Department has a clear position that patient care occurs where the patient is. Oertwich said that the NCSBN also holds the position that patient care happens where the patient is located, but she said that the American Nurses Association’s position is that care happens where the nurse is located. Delahoyde asked about attending Midyear Meeting sessions virtually. Stones reported that when she registered for the meeting, she was notified that she would be emailed the links. Oertwich said that it appeared that people need to register for the meeting in order to attend virtually.

COMMUNICATION

Oertwich reported that a new edition of Nursing News was just published. She also reported that they still have not found a replacement for Hoebelheinrich’s position.
