PRACTICE QUESTION

Could a Medical Radiographer start the IV for the ECHO Bubble Studies tech? Is it true that Medical Radiographers can't start an IV unless it's their patient? Could a Medical Radiographer assist with the Bubble Study? Or does it require a nurse, specifically, a RN? – Dawn Myer

The Board discussed that this is a facility policy, procedure, and preference.

- 1. We are wanting to start ECHO Bubble Studies but are hitting a hurdle with finding some of the regulations and need your guidance. We have been told that Rad Techs can't start IVs unless it's their patient, have you heard of this and is it in writing anywhere?*

The board discussed that Bubble studies are more of a cardiac procedure, not medical radiography.

- 2. Are you aware of any state regulations preventing Rad Techs from starting IVs for reasons other than CT or MRI contrast?*

The board has no problem with starting IVs.

- 3. Could a Rad Tech start the IV for the ECHO tech?*

The board discussed that medical radiographers can only insert contrast media and saline. However, they are able to start the IV for the ECHO tech.

- 4. Could a Rad Tech assist with the Bubble Study? Or does it require a nurse, specifically, a RN?*

The board discussed that assisting with the bubble study is outside the scope of practice for medical radiography. They are able to start an IV but can't administer.
